JOHN G. CARLISLE DIES IN NEW YORK

publican leader. Fernando Wood was the titular Democratic leader, though Randall was the real leader of the majority. Blaine, Hill, and Lamar had been transferred to the Senate.

It was an epoch when the "bloody shirt" waved conspicuously, and the grand old party's grand old garment was its emblem.

"Vote as you shot," was the cry from stump to sanctum, and the Democrats invoked John Hampton and announced that supplies would be withheld until grievances were redressed; it was a time when the Republicans said, "Having failed to shoot the government to death, you would now starve it to death."

Fine Maiden Effort.

This was the issue on which John G. Carlisle made his debut into the American Congress, a wonderful "maiden effort" that has never since been eclipsed.

It attracted universal attention and comment, drawing the fire out of every prominent Republican statesman, editor, and lawyer in Congress and out of it.

So convincing, so logical, and so entertaining was the manner in which he espoused the Democratic case that it became the cue to every other Democratic leader, and Ben Hill and Allen G. Thurman, in the Senate, merely echoed Carlisle's words.

Strange to say, the speech of Carlisle was as simple as the English language could make it; there was no passionate flow of language, no old shroud's camp meeting gestures, merely a straightforward, convincing story that they who listened might be convinced, and they were.

Logician and Lawyer.

From that day John G. Carlisle became the first lawyer and logician in Congress.

Carlisle belonged to the Morrison wing of the party, and became a leader of the tariff reformers in future Congresses, and Carlisle speeches differed from those of all others. He never used the wit or the sarcasm of Reed, the humor of Knott, or the classical allusions of Cockran. He was to Congress what Marshall was to the bench.

He used the fewest words possible to convey an idea, and he hated an adjective with a vengeance.

Though master of several languages and familiar with the classics, from his speeches one would never have suspected it.

Carlisle was created for the bar and the bench.

Few men of his generation possessed a finer mind for the separation of truth from error.

Chosen as Speaker.

The Forty-eighth Congress being overwhelmingly Democratic in the House of Representatives, the tariff reform wing of the party demanded the election of Carlisle to the Speakership. After a lively struggle he defeated Mr. Randall in the caucus.

The Forty-ninth Congress was also

CARLISLE'S LAST WORD.

Shortly before his retirement, Carlisle went to Kentucky and made a farewell speech to politics.

Few more dignified expressions ever came from the lips of an American statesman. Few ever uttered a finer sentiment or ever engendered a loftier thought.

A FAREWELL TO POLITICS.

"Gentlemen: I shall forbear to say anything on this occasion concerning the recent Democratic administration of national affairs except to assure its friends and its enemies alike that, from the President down to the humblest who co-operated with him in the exercise of his executive authority, every member of that administration is content to submit all its acts to the severest scrutiny and wait patiently the verdict of impartial history.

"When the passion and prejudice, the personal animosities, and the personal grievances of these disordered times have passed away, and the public mind is prepared to consider administrative measures and domestic and foreign policies on their real merits, the last administration of Grover Cleveland will need no champion to vindicate its wisdom and patriotism before a just and generous people."

Democratic, and Carlisle was again chosen Speaker.

Morrison, again appointed to the Ways and Means Committee, brought in a tariff reform measure, and Randall was again strong to defeat it, although Carlisle had considerably cut down the power of Mr. Randall's committee by providing for a partial distribution of the annual appropriation bills.

Mr. Carlisle took about one-half of the general appropriation bills from Mr. Randall's jurisdiction, and it enabled the House to pass the Mills bill.

Without incurring Randall's hostility, Carlisle thus deprived Randall of considerable power—a move adroit in the extreme.

Great in Office.

Mr. Carlisle will always be looked upon as one of the greatest speakers Congress ever had, and he ranks along with Macdonald, Clay, Stevenson, Winthrop, Blaine, Randall, and Reed.

In the Chair he was always the judge, never the partisan.

On the death of Mr. Beck, Mr. Carlisle was selected as his successor in the Senate, ranking there with the most prominent members of that body.

His speech against the McKinley tariff has never been surpassed in either the House or the Senate. His debate with Aldrich on the wool schedule was remarkable for its familiarity with the details of the subject.

Coinage Party.

But a new question arose that rent the Democratic party in twain and jarred the Republican party almost from its foundations—the coinage question.

John G. Carlisle was appointed Secretary of the Treasury in 1893. The Sherman silver law had played havoc with the free gold in the Treasury, and the country was in danger of going to the silver basis unless gold was obtained. Very little gold came in from Texas, the only way to buy it being to swap bonds for it.

It was done, however, and the public credit saved. It was the finest piece of financial statesmanship in the history of our country.

Carlisle held this trust for four years, his task being to preserve gold payments, which he did, retiring in 1897 to private life—a poor man, but the equal of any lawyer in the United States. He returned to the practice of the profession he loved, the law, from which he derived more pleasure than his whole twenty years of political life.

A great man, he was loved, admired, hated, and respected, which is always the penalty of true greatness.

Mr. Carlisle had resided at his Washington home, 1455 K street northwest, since 1892, with the exception of a few months' residence in New York.

ROOSEVELT AT CHURCH.

Colonel Takes a Long Walk in the Afternoon.

Oyster Bay, July 31.—There was nothing but silence from Sagamore Hill today. Col. Roosevelt attended services at Christ Church in the morning. With him were Mrs. Roosevelt, Ethel, Archie, and Quentin. The church was not crowded and there were no curious folk outside, as is often the case. In the afternoon the colonel took a long walk.

WOMAN ENDS HER LIFE.

Mrs. Dastler Feels Falling Health and Loneliness.

New York, July 31.—Mrs. Pauline F. Dastler, widow of Dr. Franz Dastler, once a well-known New York physician, committed suicide early this morning in her apartments at 69 West Eighty-seventh street by inhaling gas through a tube.

Falling health and loneliness in her advancing years are supposed to have been the causes. She was sixty-two years old.

It was evident that Mrs. Dastler had laid careful plans. All the silver in her apartments, articles of jewelry, and many trinkets were marked with cards, reading "To my sister," "To my son-in-law," and to various friends by name. This note, without address, was lying open on the bureau:

My God and all belonging to me, forgive me for what I am doing. I am not able to sleep and will sooner or later break down or lose my reason. I have tried to keep my strength, but have failed. Pardon me.

PAULINE F. DASTLER.

Mrs. Dastler was born in Germany, as was her husband. Dr. Dastler died in 1885.

SOLITUDE DRIVES WOMAN TO MURDER

Mother Kills Four Small Children by Drowning.

TWO OLDER ONES ESCAPE HER

Mrs. Joseph M. Mello, Wife of Wealthy Rancher of Contra Costa County, Cal., Goes Insane in the Loneliness of Her Surroundings. Taint in Family Causes Her Alarm.

San Francisco, July 31.—Four young children of Mrs. Joseph M. Mello, wife of a wealthy rancher near Brentwood, Contra Costa County, were drowned by their mother yesterday. Mrs. Mello was evidently driven insane by the loneliness of the country. She lived in a big farmhouse with her husband and six children, the oldest being Chester, fourteen years old. No servant was employed.

Yesterday, after writing letters to her relatives telling them she was desperate through loneliness, she took five children into the kitchen and deliberately set about killing them. First she strangled little Ramona, a four-year-old girl, and then drowned her in a washtub. Leonora, a two-year-old girl, came next.

She snatched the baby from the arms of her brother and killed the child like the others. Then she seized the twin babies, five months old, and plunged them in the tub.

Sheriff Comes to Rescue.

Little Chester, who had vainly tried to stop his mother's dreadful work, rushed out into the yard and screamed for help. Sheriff Veale happened to be passing in his automobile, and he responded. He tried to rescue the twins, but vainly. Then he took the mother to Martinez and placed her in the county hospital. The woman insisted on taking photographs of the children and looks of their half with her. She cried constantly.

To the sheriff Mrs. Mello told a story of her lonely, blank existence in the country—an existence shadowed with constant horror of impending insanity, which she confessed had carried off her mother, her sister, and her brother.

"I've lived all alone on the ranch for six long years," Mrs. Mello said. "My husband and I own 500 acres of land worth $200 an acre. Our wealth meant nothing to me. I was miserable all the

INSURANCE IN ENGLAND.

31,287,727 Persons Insured for Total of $5,470,316,575.

London, July 31.—The enormous extent to which the people of the United Kingdom have insured their lives is revealed in a blue book issued yesterday, giving the statistics of purely British companies. The main facts are:

People insured. . . . . 31,287,727
Amount insured for. . . . . $5,470,316,575
Every year a sum of over $300,000,000 is paid to the insurance companies in premiums, many millions of pounds more than is paid in income tax. The insurances are divided into two classes, ordinary and industrial, the latter being made up almost entirely of insurances on which the premiums are paid weekly.

The main figures of the two classes are as follows:

Industrial Companies. . . . . 2,576,391
Ordinary Companies. . . . . 28,711,336

Amount insured for. . . . . $1,429,048,785
Premiums (1909). . . . . $3,625,286
Capital. . . . . $1,027,435
Life and annuity funds. . . . . 198,918,525
Claims paid (1909). . . . . 28,901,500

Industrial insurances are mostly taken out by poor people who are only able to find a few pence weekly for the purpose. The cost of collection is naturally heavy, and this is reflected in the premium, which have to be paid. Thus an ordinary life insurance, usually taken out by the well-to-do man, is obtained for a premium equal on the average to about 4 per cent of the benefit. But for an industrial insurance the cost of the premium is equal to just less than 5 per cent.

The difference between the two classes may again be seen in the fact that the average amount for which an industrial insurance is taken out is only $50, while the average for the ordinary policies is $1,500. Another interesting fact shown in the return is that there are 63,725 people who are drawing annuities from life insurance companies amounting in all to $14,000,000 a year, or an average of just over $225 each a year.

Among the assets possessed by the two classes of companies, which amount to a total of $3,900,000,000, are the following:

Mortgages. . . . . $300,000,000
British government securities. . . . . 25,000,000
Indian and colonial government securities. . . . . 85,000,000
Foreign government securities. . . . . 30,000,000
Debentures. . . . . 47,500,000
Shares and stocks. . . . . 20,000,000
Land and house property and ground rents. . . . . 35,000,000

It should be noted that the return only deals with British companies, and does not include the many foreign and colonial companies which do a large business in the United Kingdom.

In His Daily Walk.

From Life.

"What makes Pithering take such mincing steps?" asked the man with the excess of side whiskers. "He trips along with such short paces that he looks positively funny."

"It's just another of his theories," explained the man with the glistening eyes. "He cured himself of dyspepsia by dieting his food and now he's trying to cure his rheumatism by fletchering his steps."

IMMIGRANT BABIES MIX WITH BIG DEPOT TRAFFIC

While waiting at Union Station yesterday evening for their trains to take them to different parts of the South and West, 200 Italian immigrants, with their baggage and babies, presented a picturesque scene.

There were many babies. Some were just able to crawl. While their mothers were sleeping on the family baggage they squirmed and wormed about the floor of the waiting-room, inspecting cuspidors and other people's baggage and hugging the feet of men and women. Occasionally
